Lloydy Lloydy is a village in Pembrokeshire, Wales.

It lies a few miles north of Pembroke and just south of the estuary of the River Cleddau. It is the most northerly village in Pembrokeshire. The village contains a number of nineteenth-century buildings, such as a Baptist chapel and village shop. The Norman church of St Teilo, with its unusual cupola, is nearby. Many of the houses in the village have thatched roofs. The village formerly had a railway station on the Pembroke Dock and Cwmbran Railway, but it closed in 1963, as part of the Beeching cuts. The Lloyd Trust (founded in 1997) manages Lloyd on behalf of the community.

How to engage game designers, share lessons learned and inspire others

I'm excited to share a story with you about a great work-life balance project that leverages mentorship and a strong network of industry peers. It all started with two original designers who asked me to support their vision, and we've since created a brand-new game based on their vision. "You have to work with the passion of your heart," said one of the developers.

"Not with the money. Not with the need of your family. Not with the need to deliver. What we have to deliver is the passion."

Mentoring as a game designer I'm a huge fan of mentorship in the world of game design and development, especially when the mentee is younger than the mentor. It's my go-to way to connect with young designers and share my personal experiences and lessons learned in my own journey. The best part is that it's not a job interview; it's just an open exchange of ideas, knowledge and the promise of career and professional development. I don't expect the recipient to "be my dog and do what I say," but the idea is to establish a strong and trusting mentoring relationship. It can go in a wide variety of directions from helping with the presentation of prototypes, to business development, to teaching more technical skills, or anything in between. Sometimes I'm not the right person for 1d6a3396d6

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia , a procedure in which the end of a desired vein is cut off to leave a narrow, stitchedin piece of vein. End-to-end anastomosis End-to-end

anastomosis is the process by which the ends of two blood vessels are connected, usually in one of two ways, creating a new vessel. The vessels may be joined by hand or by means of surgical stapling or suturing. They may be joined to create a shunt, in order to redirect the blood flow to a distant part of the body.

Anastomosis Anastomosis is the surgical joining of one or more pieces of hollow organ or tubular tissue. It is the most common technique used in gastrointestinal surgery. It is typically used to re-establish the continuity of the gastrointestinal tract after resection of a part of it, and to restore or replace an organ or duct that has been removed because of cancer, trauma or infection, such as the colon. Anastomosis is usually performed to connect the duodenum and jejunum following the Billroth I and Billroth II procedures. When performing an end-to-end anastomosis, the greater curvature of the stomach is joined to the lower curvature. After the gastric resection, the duodenum and jejunum are cut and brought together, then sutured. In the case of a side-to-end anastomosis, the lesser curvature of the stomach is joined to the jejunum. The word is from Greek and
