To be honest, I don't actually have much in the way of 'real life' advice to give out on this. But, I can say that it's very cool, and I don't have any problems with it at all. I'm not a filmmaker myself, but I can see it being really useful if you're trying to find videos that you've been sent. And it seems to work really well, so I'm kind of surprised this hasn't had more attention. 1. Open the folder you want to save the videos to. 2. Select the video you want to keep and press the Save button. 3. In the 09e8f5149f

The goal of this study was to examine the accuracy of estimates of total sweat loss (TSL) during submaximal exercise using a cognitive (behavioral) model and to determine which model best predicts TSL during submaximal steady state exercise. Twelve male (mean \pm SE; 25.5 \pm 0.6 years; 72.1 \pm 2.4 kg) and eight female (26.2 \pm 0.5 years, 64.6 \pm 1.7 kg) subjects performed submaximal steady state treadmill exercise at a constant speed of 82 m x min⁻¹) at three intensities for 2 h. TSL was estimated from local sweat rate (LSR) using an isothermal equation for Newtonian (NS) and non-Newtonian (BN) models. NS and BN models estimate TSL using the intensity of the exercise. NS and BN models were based on the concept of congruence between the relationship between TSR and total body water (TBW) and the relationship between LSR and TBW. For the two models, % of VO2max was utilized for regression equations. Paired t-tests revealed no significant difference between the models for any of the intensities for males (all P > 0.05) or females (all P > 0.05). The NS model tended to overestimate sweat losses when compared to the BN model for males (ns = 0.06, P > 0.05) and females (ns = 0.06, P > 0.05). The BN model tended to underestimate sweat losses when compared to the NS model for males (ns = -0.06, P > 0.05) and females (ns = -0.05, P > 0.05). Consequently, the BN model tended to overestimate TSL when compared to the NS model for males (ns = 0.001, P
