Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image forming apparatus having a fixing device, and an image forming method in an image forming apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art A belt fixing method which is relatively high in fixing ability and maintenance-free is applied to various image forming apparatuses, for example, an electrophotographic copying machine, a printer, a facsimile machine, and a multifunction peripheral. In recent years, an image forming apparatus, in which a belt is used as a heat fixing member, has been developed. In such an image forming apparatus, it is necessary to accurately position a paper carrying belt to a fixing nip formed in the fixing device. For this purpose, first, in the fixing device, a reference surface on the belt is sensed by a sensor. Then, based on a result of the sensing, the belt is moved to a position of the reference surface, and is stopped at the position. Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. 2011-203295 discusses a technique for reducing or removing the difference in the time taken to reach a predetermined position between a roller, on which an unload roll is provided, and a fixing nip, due to the fact that the sensor is provided on the unload roll. In Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. 2011-203295, when the unload roller is rotated, a reference surface of the belt swings. Thus, the difference in the time taken to reach the reference surface becomes a value which corresponds to the maximum swinging width of the reference surface. Thus, a distance between the sensor and a paper conveying belt, the sensor of which swings, is increased. As a result, a variation in the distance between the sensor and the belt is increased. Accordingly, it is difficult to accurately position the belt. Asymptomatic aortic regurgitation in the cardiac surgical patient. Aortic regurgitation (AR) is an impairment of a valve function that remains unknown to most clinicians. The patient's symptoms are often insidious. Recent studies, including an international study of more than 20,000 patients, have demonstrated that approximately 1 in 15 patients who require cardiac surgery has postoperative AR.

One-degree of freedom vehicles, such as cars, have been developed to make it possible to drive a vehicle on a straight line at low speed with a very small size and low weight. However, it is difficult to control the propulsion of such a one-degree of 3e33713323
